Question 7 (15 marks)

Grocer Plus is a well-established supermarket chain with more than 5000 stores worldwide. Its human resources training program provides all staff with opportunities to become multiskilled. This, in turn, provides Grocer Plus’ management with greater flexibility in managing the business as staff develop a greater breadth of skills. Grocer Plus’ management is also very open to suggestions from staff and listens to what they have to say, while still maintaining final decision-making power for the business.

a. Explain one training option that would be appropriate for Grocer Plus to continue to multiskill its employees. 2 marks

Question 8 (10 marks)

Using a business case study from the past four years, illustrate how corporate social responsibility considerations can influence the decisions taken by management in relation to an operations system. Evaluate the potential effects that these decisions may have on one stakeholder of the business.
Case study

Compucinch Pty Ltd is an IT consultancy business established 15 years ago by its CEO, David Myles. The company specialises in the provision of expert advice, assistance and support to clients making IT software and hardware purchases. Step-by-step instructions and advice are provided to clients while they are making these purchases. Compucinch has grown to employ 30 full-time employees since the establishment of the business. All of Compucinch’s employees are currently working under award pay and conditions.

Digipurchase Pty Ltd is a competitor of Compucinch and offers a similar product range. Over the past six months, three of Compucinch’s employees have resigned to take up positions with Digipurchase. Exit interviews have shown that the departing employees have been attracted by the more generous pay and conditions offered in the Digipurchase enterprise agreement.
