GENERAL COMMENTS

Although students’ abilities varied widely, in most cases they had prepared well and listened carefully before accurately and confidently responding to questions. Students were able to extend their answers, elaborate on their opinions and use conversational repair strategies adequately.

Some students were nervous and jumped into their answers before the assessors had completed asking the question. It is not wise to conclude the content of the question after hearing a few words, and students should wait until the assessor has finished talking before they answer. It is also not advisable to rely on rote-learned material or passages.

It is important that students not speak too fast, even if they are very confident and have a lot to say. Chewing gum also tends to produce mumbled speech that impacts on students’ performances. Speaking clearly at an adequate speed better demonstrates preparation and confidence and allows the assessors to properly understand the student’s answers.

Students tended to prepare better for the Discussion than for the Conversation. Students and teachers are encouraged to look carefully at the assessment criteria: ‘communication’, content’ and ‘language’ for both the Conversation and Discussion.

SPECIFIC INFORMATION

Section 1 – Conversation

Students were expected to interact with assessors and converse on aspects of their personal world, including family and friends, school and home, interests and aspirations.

Criterion 1: Communication

Demonstrated capacity to maintain and advance the exchange appropriately and effectively; clarity of expression

None of the students had difficulty understanding the questions being asked in this section. Most demonstrated an excellent level of understanding and carried the conversation forward with confidence. The most successful students engaged the assessors’ attention and provided extensive responses to the questions asked.

Only a small number of students were unable to provide relevant responses when they were asked questions that either they were not anticipating or that were not in the order they were expecting. Some students resorted to pre-learned material to compensate for their lack of preparation and repeatedly experienced difficulty in expanding on opinions.

Criterion 2: Content

Relevance, breadth and depth of information, opinions and ideas

Students’ performance in this section was not quite as good as in the communication section. Their capacity to support or elaborate on information, ideas and opinions with reasons, examples and evidence is crucial. However, most students were well prepared in terms of organising information, alternative phrasing and spontaneously justifying statements in unrehearsed situations without resorting to pre-learned information.

In this section, students who respond with only simplistic answers do not demonstrate their ability. They should avoid generalisations and stereotypes in their comments. It is important to clearly and logically present a good range of information, ideas and opinions.

Criterion 3: Language

Accuracy of vocabulary and grammar; range and appropriateness of vocabulary and grammar

The performance level of students in this section varied. Some students were able to demonstrate an awareness of appropriate style and register, such as modest ways of talking about their own strengths.

Students would benefit if they were able to apply a range of grammatical patterns in their answers, such as: ‘although’, ‘not only/but also’, ‘as long as’, ‘since’ and ‘prefer to’. Students must realise that this conversation task is more than a dialogue test of their Chinese speaking skills. Often students forget to use certain alternative phrases and linking grammatical patterns to shape their speech. It is also important that students are able to self-correct their errors.
Section 2 – Discussion
Time management appeared to be an issue for some students, who had difficulty effectively allocating their response time. At times they were able to complete one aspect while other aspects were not efficiently expressed.

Criterion 1: Communication
Demonstrated capacity to maintain and advance the exchange appropriately and effectively; clarity of expression
It is important that students choose a topic and sub-topic that suits their interests and skill level. Some students tend to choose difficult or rare topics to demonstrate their unique content. This is fine as long as the topics they choose follow the study design and are related to Chinese-speaking communities. Some students chose topics, such as young people’s idols or the generation gap, that were not specific to the Chinese community. These topics often did not fulfil the requirements of the Detailed Study.

Although the one-minute introduction is not assessed, it is recommended that students clearly and logically outline their topic and aspects.

Criterion 2: Content
Capacity to present information, ideas and opinions on a chosen topic
The average performance levels for this criterion were not as good as with other criteria. Students who performed well had prepared their Detailed Study logically and sequentially and were able to express their knowledge of the aspects, their opinions and their own analysis. Students should use resources such as books, movies and documentaries to support their study. Supporting material is allowed in this section; however, it also should not contain any text, apart from a title, heading or labels.

Only a small number of students were unable to answer all of the questions related to the topic they had chosen. Students need to understand that the discussion should be an analysis of their chosen texts rather than just an introduction of a broad topic. It is recommended that students focus on a particular topic or sub-topic. Students also need to learn how to keep both depth and breadth in balance within the seven-minute discussion.

Most students chose the following topics: Chinese tea, an historic figure, festivals or tourism spots in China.

Criterion 3: Language
Accuracy of vocabulary and grammar; range and appropriateness of vocabulary and grammar
Students who performed well in this criterion had selected a topic that interested them and allowed for a language level that suited their ability. Some students presented sophisticated ‘written Chinese language’ that was not easily understood during the oral discussion. Most students had prepared well in terms of sentence structure and sequential consequence. Some students were not able to appropriately link passages; therefore, their language levels were quite unbalanced.

Students should be aware that assessors will often ask further questions following their initial answers. Thus rote-learned passages will often not serve them well in responding to alternative questions.

Written component

GENERAL COMMENTS
There were 392 students who participated in the 2006 written examination. Most students demonstrated a fairly good understanding of the requirements and performed reasonably well, particularly in Section 3 – Writing in Chinese.

Section 1 – Listening and responding and Section 2 – Reading and responding discriminated between students well in this year’s examination. In Section 1, most questions contained two or three aspects that needed to be answered, but some students only focused on one aspect of the question and missed the rest of the details. In Section 2, quite a few students did not read the questions carefully. Some responses contained spelling mistakes and grammatical errors.

The five topics in Section 3 were well-designed, within the students’ abilities and of similar difficulty. Some students did not adhere to the formats required for the different writing styles and text types. Students should be advised to develop a writing plan before they begin the task. Students should also be aware that the length is strictly limited to 250–300 Chinese characters; they should avoid exceeding this limit or submitting responses without sufficient words to provide substantial content.
