To what extent do you agree with this statement?
SECTION D

Instructions for Section D
Section D is based on Unit 4 Outcome 2: Debating Australia’s future 1960–2000.
This section contains four representations – A., B., C. and D. You will find these representations on pages 2–4 of the insert. Select one representation.

Question 7 (20 marks)
Refer to pages 2–4 of the insert.
Analyse one of the representations in the insert.
Your response should include • identification of the attitudes reflected in the representation. Use evidence from the representation to support your comments. 4 marks

• evaluation of the degree to which the representation reflects attitudes about the issues that you have studied at that particular point in time. 8 marks

• analysis of changing attitudes in relation to this issue. To support your comments, use evidence from the other point in time that you have studied. 8 marks

☐ A., B., C. or D.
Extra space for responses

Clearly number all responses in this space.
A script book is available from the supervisor if you need extra paper to complete your answer. Please ensure you write your student number in the space provided on the front cover of the script book. At the end of the examination, place the script book inside the front cover of this question and answer book.
SECTION A

Section A is based on Unit 3 Outcome 1: A new land: Port Phillip District/colony of Victoria 1830–1860. Choose either Question 1 or Question 2.

Question 1, Document A

… the real moving cause was the ‘plebeian hope\(^1\) of being able to better my worldly condition’. England seems to have been suffering from a glut of young gentlemen without financial prospects, without the ability to make a career in the professions open to them, and unwilling to accept the social declassification still involved in accepting employment in trade or industry. Now they had a golden opportunity to live the life of leisured gentlemen – in England, for to them Victoria was only a means to an end.

However, many of the gentlemen and professional men were migrating in full seriousness of purpose. Clearly, there was also ‘a super\(^2\)fluity\(^3\) of ingenious\(^3\) and educated men’ who, such was the competition, would be fortunate to make the most of their talents in England … Some were attracted to migration as an easier road to riches, some because they saw they could make more of their talents in a wider field, some because they knew they were not first-rate men but could be big fish in a colony.

\(^1\)plebeian hope – ordinary person’s hope

\(^2\)superfluity – oversupply of

\(^3\)ingenious – clever

Question 2, Document B

On my first journeys into the country I was very much surprised to find so few natives, and thought they were keeping out of the way … On better acquaintance I found their number really very small …

In December 1836 I was at great pains to muster all that were in the Geelong district, and gave each a blanket; they were Buckley’s tribe, and he assured me I had mustered the whole of them, amounting to only 279. They were always friendly; I was well known amongst them, and wherever I went they received me kindly. But, alas! the decrease has been fearful, chiefly from drinking, and exposure to all weathers bringing on pulmonary\(^1\) complaints. Since their connexion with the whites there has been little increase. When I first numbered them they had several children amongst them, but they decreased every year, and now in this tribe we have only 34 adults, and only two children under five years. The men now living were all children when I arrived, and are beginning to look old, so that in ten years more there will not be one alive.

Every attempt to civilize them has signally failed. I have had several in my family for years, and taught them to read and go to church with the family; but after a time the other youths would threaten them and carry them off, when they again got fond of a savage life. I am convinced that no plan, except one based on entire isolation, will succeed with these poor degraded people.

\(^1\)pulmonary – relating to the lungs
SECTION D

Question 7
Section D is based on Unit 4 Outcome 2: Debating Australia’s future 1960–2000.
Choose one of the representations (A., B., C. or D.) to answer Question 7. Make sure that you read the instructions on page 16 of the question and answer book before you begin to analyse the representation that you have chosen.

B. Attitudes to the Vietnam War

This Government, as previous governments, has approached this question in the spirit which was crystallised in one sentence by … Mr Calwell … when he was Leader of the Opposition. That sentence is:

The overriding issue which this Parliament has to deal with at all times … must be judged by this one crucial test: What best promotes our national security, what best guarantees our national survival.

The Government believes that judged on this standard, our engagement in Vietnam is right and that it does best promote our national security … The one consistent thread of principle – that small nations are best rendered secure if other small nations are not allowed to be overrun – has distinguished our policy through the post-war years. That is why we are in Vietnam, and that we should be there is a proposition supported by three of the significant political parties in Australia and opposed by one – the Labor Party. I put it to the House that Australian security is bound up with seeing that aggression does not succeed. I put it to the House that it is immoral to launch aggression but not immoral to resist it. This is a proposition which has been twisted and turned inside out by those who cry that this is an immoral war. So it is – but the immorality is in those who began it, who continue to invade, who will not negotiate for peace, who are bent on conquest and nothing but conquest.

C. Attitudes to the environment

Everyone except the organisers and the participants seemed sceptical of the success of the blockade, but after a month of action it has remained peaceful and is achieving its aim of drawing national and international attention to the damage being wrought1 to this latest addition to the World Heritage List. Over 1400 people from all over Australia are intending to participate and 600 have already been arrested, mostly on charges of trespassing or obstructing police or public officers. Relationships with police and H.E.C. workers continue to be mostly good, while the extent of media coverage has been staggering. This has been Australia's biggest, peaceful, direct action campaign and has solicited2 unprecedented support from the Australian public …

Perhaps the least noticed repercussion of the blockade is the indirect political pressure that has now been exerted by the public and media reaction. Since ordinary, working Australians are prepared to devote their spare time to peacefully protesting against an unnecessary dam and even go to gaol for it, politicians have been forced to take the issue seriously: the blockade has become another tool to try to get the Federal Government to act to save the South West as it is legally entitled to do. If the Government continues to procrastinate over intervention, then the role of the blockade in maintaining political pressure is obvious.

D. Attitudes to immigration

Australia is being forced to hard decisions about its future. More than 3500 war refugees from Southeast Asia have sailed to northern Australia in the past two years. About 2500 fled to Darwin harbor from East Timor after the invasion by Indonesia in 1976, and more than 1000 Indochina refugees have trickled down to Australia’s north coast in twenty-nine small boats …

What is new is that Australia has become a country of ‘first asylum’ for Asian refugees. While Australia has a good record of hospitality to refugees, the real question Australia faces is that of its own internal ethnic balance. Australia has only fourteen million people, and they are overwhelmingly European in origin. So the country cannot take large numbers of Asian refugees without changing the ethnic ratios of its migrant intake. The old ‘White Australia’ policy has gone, but Australia is still moving cautiously …

In sum, then, the arrival of the ‘boat people’ has prompted some deep rethinking about Australia’s immigration program. In the long term this may mark a major shift toward a multiracial society that includes significant and growing numbers of Asians.
