2017 VCE Korean Second Language written examination report

General comments

In the 2017 VCE Korean Second Language written examination, students were well prepared and able to complete all the required tasks in each section.

In Section 1 – Listening and responding, students demonstrated their comprehension skills by identifying the required information from three spoken texts. In Part B of Section 1, most students displayed a good level of understanding of the spoken text by presenting the required information in their responses. However, some students made an error by presenting their answers in dot point format rather than in full sentences. It is important for students to read questions very carefully in each part of the written examination.

In Section 2 – Reading and responding, students demonstrated their comprehension skills after reading three written texts: an article, an informal letter and an advertisement. Some students presented long responses, exceeding the provided answer space on the examination. In some cases, whole sentences from the texts were simply copied and translated. Students are expected to rephrase and condense the identified information in accordance with the question. In Part B of Section 2, most students displayed their understanding of the task by presenting reasons for and against applying for the position. Some students presented outstanding responses by integrating the required information in a sophisticated way.

In Section 3 – Writing in Korean, students were required to respond to one of five questions. Each question represented a different kind of writing, such as imaginative, informative, personal, evaluative and persuasive. The most popular question chosen by students was Question 11, the persuasive writing task, which required students to write a letter to the principal, opposing a plan to change to digital textbooks.

Section 3 – Writing in Korean

Question 7
Students were expected to write an imaginative short story about becoming invisible to help people in danger. Some stories that scored highly displayed the writers’ creativity and originality through the settings, events and characters. Each of these stories contained a very interesting plot that was well structured in several paragraphs. Some examples of the imaginary settings for helping people in danger were a hospital, shopping centre and camping ground.

Question 8
This question required students to write an informative article on how senior students can use social network services wisely while studying. Students provided some interesting ideas about ways of productively using social networking, such as forming an action group with like-minded people and setting a strictly designated time for social networking. Some students supported their ideas effectively by adding statistics and experts’ quotations.

Question 9
This question required students to write a journal entry focusing on a personal experience of overcoming a bad habit. Students with high-scoring responses demonstrated an ability to integrate all necessary aspects of reflection throughout their responses. They described a particular habit and clearly stated its significant impact. This was followed by one or two paragraphs of descriptive recounts, focusing on personal efforts for overcoming the habit. Some of the bad habits presented by the students were nail-biting, gossiping, overindulging and procrastinating.

Question 10
This was the second-most popular question chosen by students. This question required students to write a script for a speech on the advantages and disadvantages of having pets in aged-care centres. Some students produced high-scoring responses by stating proportionally balanced ideas for each case. Those students were able to present their ideas objectively within well-linked paragraphs.

Question 11
This was the most popular question chosen by students. Students were asked to write a persuasive letter to the principal to oppose the plan of switching to digital textbooks. Students with high-scoring responses produced a convincing letter by presenting sufficient ideas to support their arguments. They presented logically sequenced paragraphs with a topic sentence at the beginning of each. Their arguments were well supported by convincing reasons, such as academic, economic and health concerns.
