Representation 2
A survivor of the Stolen Generations, Vicki Lee Roach (also known as Vickie Roach) is an Indigenous Australian. Her experiences of growing up in foster homes, youth shelters and on the streets led to substance abuse and involvement in criminal activities. She was in and out of prison for most of her early adult life. While in prison she undertook various university studies and, in part inspired by her exposure to human rights issues, she was prompted to challenge the Howard Government in the High Court over prisoners’ rights to vote. It was Vicki’s belief that the issue of voting rights was especially important to Indigenous Australians because they are over-represented in the prison system. She also believed Indigenous people needed to be more politically active.
